EXHIBIT A

NIGEL WATERS: 'PLASTIC BEACH IN 100 YEARS'

Mixed media on canvas (80 x 100 cm)

ARTIST'S STATEMENT: "I am a semi-abstract seascape painter whose work is concerned with pollution, climate change and the changing geology caused by coastal erosion of the Jurassic Coast in East Devon. This seascape depicts a sea and beach overrun with plastic pollution that could become a reality in 100 years if we don't change our habits by recycling as much as possible. We all have a responsibility to protect the planet for the sake of future generations to be able to enjoy it. My style is semi-abstract expressionist always with a vivid use of colour and the scene loosely depicts a futuristic view of Jacobs Ladder Beach and Cliffs at Sidmouth."

SUSAN DERGES 'TIDE POOL 31' (Unique c-type print, 2015)

SEA GARDEN

Sea Garden is a unique exhibition at Exeter's Royal Albert Memorial Museum and Art Gallery. It brings together contemporary art in a wide range of media from video to textiles and photography to sculpture. High-profile and internationally-acclaimed artists working on themes of the marine environment are displayed here, with many of the artworks being shown for the first time. With more than 10 artists represented in Sea Garden and nearly half living in the South West, this is an exhibition will appeal to makers and art lovers alike.

Dartmoor-based internationally-acclaimed Susan Derges' stunning wall of Tide Pools and her new book Ocean Flowers, a collaboration with the poet John Wedgwood Clarke, are simply gorgeous. Dorothy Cross's video piece Jelly Fish Lake shows jellyfish swimming round the head and shoulders of a floating woman and though we might fear their sting, here they appear beautiful.

Turner Prize nominee Lucy Skaer has added her own idiosyncratic marks to nineteenth-century Bradbury seaweed prints especially for Sea Garden. Mikhail Karikis's four-screen installation in the centre of the gallery is an extraordinary experience where you sit on seagrass matting from the North Pacific island of Jeju, the location of his filming, to enjoy watching and listening to this work. Karikis's film is about the community of the haenyō (literally meaning sea women) who are a vanishing community of now elderly women who free dive to collect seaweed.

RAMM's historic seaweed collection is on display alongside these contemporary artists' work. During the middle of the nineteenth century collecting seaweed was a preoccupation for women. It was an acceptable hobby at a time when they were excluded from the scientific professions. Typically these female botanists shared their collections with male scientists who then won the acclaim for their research. In Sea Garden you see, for the first time, beautiful examples of RAMM's historic sea weeds displayed floor to ceiling alongside an installation by the Totnes-based artist Jo Crook, a contemporary collector of seaweeds from South Devon's beaches.

Bristol-based Bryony Gillard's newly-commissioned moving-image work is being shown here for the first time too. Bryony won RAMM's first South West commission earlier in the year. It was her suggestion to work with RAMM's historic seaweed collection that inspired the contemporary art curator Lara Goodband to create this must-see exhibition.

BETH CARTER

Darkness runs through Beth Carter's work as she explores death, vulnerability and human frailty. The myth of the Minotaur in its many guises and reincarnations has been an obsession with Carter for over twenty years and it was only when her much-loved father died, six years ago, that she realised that her 'life-sized minotaur sculptures were all about him'.

Beth's father, a self-taught sculptor, was a hugely complex character, a product of a difficult upbringing and a lack of formal education. He chose wide-ranging materials, from scrap metal to marble clay. He took Beth to see classical sculpture in the V & A cast galleries and he gifted her his passion for art. She is still working through her feelings of loss using her enduring sense of shock to explore father daughter relationships, capitalising on the emotional range in her work.

The Minotaur works encapsulate the duality that is one of the defining characteristics of Beth's art. Vulnerability married with power and tyranny, bestiality pitted against the value of the printed word. A small child stands fearless on a beast-headed figure. The Minotaur cradles a tiny gold book with immense care. It is a treasure. Her apparent sympathy for this creature and the tenderness in the portrayal suggests that he is misunderstood, perhaps lonely, rather than the evil creature of mythology. These apparent contradictions lie at the heart of her work. Her use of the hybrid allows her to focus on animals as displacement in the confrontation of the human condition and unacceptable human behaviour.

Body language and the use of gesture are essential elements of Beth's work. Scale is vital. Figures hunch over, curling in on themselves protectively. They sit, legs dangling in space, suggesting that the world is a bigger place than they are. The man creatures are often huge but the scale is that of a child whose feet don't quite touch the floor at the dinner table. Crowns to dunce's hats to bull heads and masks are all part of her rich iconography. Animals are ascribed human emotions. In Monkey and Horse, monkey as jester, fool, favourite of the circus ring, perches on a fallen writhing horse. Open to dual interpretation, subjugation of power or simply curiosity?

In Leading the Giant, a small girl leads a crowned figure who towers over her, its symbolism open to so many interpretations. His posture is unthreatening suggesting an adult leaning forward to engage with a child. He holds the string by which she leads him, loosely in both hands, with great care. The girl looks into the distance clearly sure that this huge figure will follow her. It is tempting to equate this certainty of youth with current young icon Greta Thunberg, an unintentional reference and too literal, yet

'LEADING THE GIANT' (Bronze and string, edition of 15, 57 x 19 x 28 cm and 25 x 12 x 7 cm)

a connection which is testament to the suggestive power of Carter's work.

Farewell Carousel, made for Sawdust and Sequins: The Art of the Circus at the Royal West of England Academy in Bristol, sums up her risk-taking. Horses hurtle through space in ever-limiting circles displaying barely controlled power. Constructed in crystal plaster, surrounded by a Perspex guard, the supreme fragility of these broken horses gives a heart-stopping sense of the cataclysm if their tumultuous progress broke through the dual protective and restrictive clear circle.

The subject matter of her superb drawings is disturbing revealing a close affinity with the work of Paula Rego. Technically her sculpture encompasses both the traditional and the experimental in its range of materials and process. Her bronzes referencing the 'supreme master' Rodin are raw with passion, the hand of the maker creating an incredibly tactile, savagely immediate surface.

There are many different interpretations of the Minotaur myth including ones that cast King Minos as the real villain. Her King Minos shows him wearing a crown that is too small for him. The misfit between crown and head reveals his obsession with but misuse of power - so many parallels with current politics!

Beth feels that the world is a dark place and she finds that very frightening. Eyes closed not watching, her owls symbolise the importance of interior life, the internalisation of fear. She doesn't shy away from sadness but her work allows a sense of redemption manifested through her extensive use of animal human symbolism.

Power is invested in small objects, small creatures. A tiny book, a precious object, contains the potential for knowledge, which can defeat the huge mass and strength of the Minotaur. In her representations of the Minotaur, as giant, reading, with bird, with moth, he handles these tiny delicate creatures with a sense of awe and wonderment. This is not destruction, it is love.

'OLD WORKINGS, MOOR, SUMMER CLOUDS' (77 x 117 cm, 2019)

ANDREW HARDWICK

"Bristol based artist Andrew Hardwick's studio is based on a farm where the River Severn turns into the sea, a landscape surrounded by industry and new housing estates. Hardwick's paintings give us a narrative of this landscape which he recalls from childhood explorations and adult observation, communicated to the viewer through layers of board, canvas, netting, wire and various paints supported by battens, which offer a purposely warped structure to the work which is not confined by the rectangle format. His works protrude and recess, creating an undulating surface with gouged out negative spaces and artefacts embedded in the surface. Through his paintings Hardwick aims to give the viewer an experience of the landscape, to evoke emotion and a tangible reality in its raw form. His large-scale diptychs and triptychs will draw you away from the white space of the gallery wall and into their complex surfaces and layers."

SHEILA HERRING

DRAWN TO CRAFT

Contemporary craft represents a large part of the visual arts. It is a platform upon which skill, design and individual creativity meet. This year's winter exhibition at Salisbury Arts Centre will include work made by some of the top contemporary British craft practitioners. It is an exhibition which seeks inspiration from drawing and will reflect on the drawn line. Whilst some of the work on show will present scenes and narratives and use the drawn line as an aid for the design of these, in other works the line is integral to the design or even the material itself.

Amongst the exhibiting artists, you will be able to see work by print maker Sarah Young. Sarah is a household name in British craft and well known for her lino and wood cuts as well as screen prints. Her work, often inspired by tales and myths, is included in many books and publications and whilst Sarah is renowned for her work she is also the director and founder of the Brighton Art Fair and MADE (Design and Craft Fair).

Also included is the work of three potters: Mishima inlay technique and stoneware by Jennie Gilbert, robust but subtle pots combining expression and function made by Sheila Herring, and exquisite and lively slipware made on a kick wheel by North Pembrokeshire-based Jennifer Hall. Jennifer will also be delivering a slipware workshop at Salisbury Arts Centre.

Francesca Mclean is an illustrator based in The New Forest, who works in gouache and ink stamps to create illustrations inspired by the countryside. Using recycled materials, plastics and resins, Bronwen Gwillim creates wearable, sculptural jewellery which mimics the effects of the sea when working the surface to obtain the natural feel of a 'treasured pebble' collected from the beach.

Hand-crafted lamps by Collin Chetwood embrace mark-making created by surprise and chance when applied to the surface of the Japanese rice paper by tools such as syringe, reed pen, and brushes. The fascination with the sustainable, natural and simply beautiful is at the heart of the work of basket maker Louise Brown who will be delivering basket making days at the Arts Centre.

CONTEMPORARY ART EXHIBITION

Alchemy

Artefacts Reimagined

The Salisbury Museum
Until 4 January 2020

A compelling new exhibition inspired by objects from four museums.

The artworks, all in gold or white, were created by Ann-Marie James with techniques including painting, gilding and printmaking.

The Archer series was inspired by The Salisbury Museum's Amesbury Archer, and the Chieftain series by Wiltshire Museum's Bush Barrow lozenge.

The artworks are for sale and a share of the proceeds will go to Wessex Museums.

WESSEX WINTER GUIDE 2019

DEBBIE LEE 'SNOW MAIDEN' (Solar etching)

WESSEX WINTER GUIDE

November and December 2019

'NIGHT NAVIGATION' (Intaglio, 67 x 98 cm, 2014)

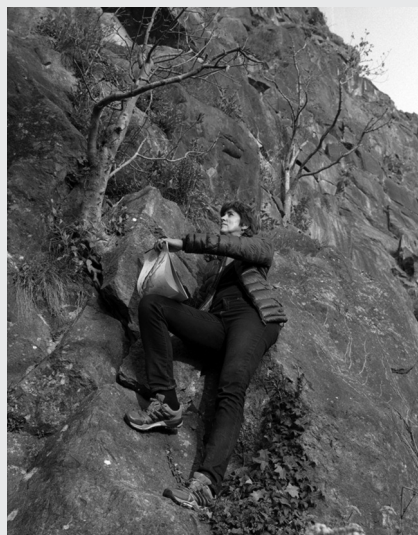

EMMA STIBBON

As Winter draws in, Yeats' line 'Of night and light and the half-light'* seems particularly appropriate as I write this on the Cahernaheeha Mountain in the protected Kerry International Dark-Sky Reserve in the Republic of Ireland. Moonless nights in this wild and rugged landscape, looking out over the Atlantic, are gradually enveloped in a near total black-out of velvety darkness.

This type of uninhabited landscape and other far wilder and more remote places in the world are the subject of Emma Stibbon's sometimes bleak vision. Bleak in terms of how she chooses to portray the fragility of humanity in the face of the implacability of nature. Her work is deeply concerned with the environment and she grasps the terrifying power of natural forces: the unstoppable crushing force of ice, the searing heat of volcanic eruption. In Stromboli Smoke the ethereal quality of hot smoke is transformed into something tangible and weighty granting it the due terror of what is to come.

In her account of her residency on HMS Protector on the Antarctic Peninsula she talks about the ship carving its way through the sea-ice at night using the ships searchlight. In making her monumental woodcuts she slices her way easily through the wood when working with the grain but exerts her full strength in the physical intensity of carving against the grain. Dramatic passages of inky darkness are achieved in her woodcuts by smoothing the surface of the wood with filler and in her polymer gravure prints by capitalising on the painterly qualities of the process. Stibbon's powerfully beautiful prints display her complete mastery of her material and her process. Informed by her immersive engagement with the landscapes she draws and photographs she does not aim for a topographically accurate rendering but rather an expression of the 'physical experience' and a deeply felt emotional sense of place. Her huge woodcuts have an overwhelming presence that destabilises our certainties and provides a poignant reminder of our fast disappearing natural resources.

PERFORMANCE

November and December 2019

JAMES WILTON DANCE: THE STORM

James Wilton Dance, one of Europe's most in-demand dance companies, will make sure sparks fly on Bonfire Night when they bring The Storm, a breathtaking fusion of acrobatics, martial arts, breakdancing and contact work, to Poole on 5 November.

A whirlwind of lightning fast, super athletic movement that will blow audiences away, seven dancers of extraordinary skill are driven by a soundtrack of thundering electro-rock specially composed by Polish alt rock music project Amarak in an extraordinary performance that also features thousands of pieces of paper.

The Storm grows from a light breeze and becomes something too powerful to fathom. It scoops the dancers into the air then drops them to the floor with unrelenting velocity, transforms them into mini tornadoes and sends them spiralling out of control. More than just weather, this storm is of the mind. You can't see the wind but you can see how it changes objects. In the same way, you can't see emotions, but you can see how they change people, how they knock them off their feet, then sweep them away. In this storm can you find peace? Can you find the calm eye of the storm? Will it all blow over?

James Wilton Dance was founded in 2010 and quickly amassed choreographic awards and critical acclaim nationally and internationally. Their most recent works Leviathan and Last Man Standing have accumulated over 170 performances, thrilling audiences all over the world.

THE LOCAL HONEYS

"Following their hugely successful appearance at this year's Beer and Bluegrass Festival, the Local Honeys return for a very special evening of Americana and Bluegrass. The Local Honeys are Linda Jean Stokley and Montana Hobbs, both hail from the green rolling hills of Eastern Kentucky, the traditional home of Bluegrass. They blend old time songs and stories of yesteryear with their own high quality self-penned originals. Their rise has been meteoric, they are hugely popular both in USA and now in Europe. It is indeed a pleasure to welcome them back to Poole, for what will be a fantastic night."

OPPORTUNITIES

● In 2020 Artwave West is launching a new and exciting Artist in Residence programme aimed at art and craft makers from across a range of creative disciplines. A studio / workshop will be made available for the purposes of carrying out creative work and contributing to a programme of educational events. There will also be an opportunity to display and sell examples of work and gain valuable creative exposure through the gallery. Applications are now open. For further information email info@artwavewest.com.

● The Mothership: Artist Residencies in Rural Dorset 2019. The Mothership project, which emerged in 2016 in rural Dorset from the cosmic skies of rural loneliness juxtaposed with the contained space of the domestic sphere, is an invitation for the chance encounters of the urban art world to occur in this unlikely location, a house at the edge of a wood. The Mothership is an offering of time and space for artists without pressure to produce anything particular. This is a social art project, an experiment in autonomy and scale, exploring the relationship between host and guest and the exchange that may occur. This is an unpaid residency opportunity and a fee is charged to cover overheads. Deadline Friday 20 December 2019. Please see annabest.info/residencies/ for further information on how to apply.

● Operations Assistant, Spike Island: We are looking for a dynamic, resilient and resourceful individual to support the work of the Operations Manager, both in an administrative and practical capacity. The Operations Assistant plays a vital role in the everyday running of our busy cultural venue. The role demands a proactive, can-do attitude from someone who is driven to deliver a high quality, responsive service to meet the diverse demands of our building and its users. Deadline Friday 8 November 2019. 0117 929 2266 / recruit@spikeisland.org.uk / spikeisland.org.uk/jobs

● Call-out to curators for Fringe Arts Bath 2020: Have an idea for an exhibition? Tell us about it. Fringe Arts Bath (FaB) gives opportunities to early career curators and Artists, FaB is a test-bed for new work, radical approaches, for pushing boundaries, a place for those who prefer to operate outside of the gallery based-arts scene. FaB is offering aspiring curators the opportunity to devise and organise a show as part of FaB Festival, 22 May - 7 June 2020. We invite fresh and challenging concepts: we encourage you to think outside the box! Anyone can apply, with any level of experience: students, graduates, artists, local, national, international. The deadline is Friday 8 November. fringeartsbath.co.uk / submissions@fringeartsbath.co.uk.
